The Deming in Education Seminar is a four-day, interactive learning event and hands-on approach to the Deming Method. It delves deep into the Quality Learning principles and tools necessary to gain the vision, purpose and capacity for quality implementation and to overcome challenges and behavior problems in your classrooms.

This is not another new program; it is a theory, a way of making decisions that returns the power of thinking, creativity and performance back to students and teachers. It is possible to see the joy of learning return to everyone in the education system, including parents.

You will learn:
- New ways to strengthen and build relationships between learner and facilitator.
- How to develop or design an educational environment where learners are responsible for learning.
- How to build systems that enable learners to make choices and give them experience in self-evaluation.
- How to create motivated classrooms and staff work environments.
- How to collect and use meaningful data to make decisions.
- How educators have made improvements in learning world-wide.

Through an interactive multimedia process, you will study learning concepts, how to improve learning systems, how to gather data, and how to work in teams.

The seminar will explore:
- Exponential Learning
- Intrinsic vs. Extrinsic Motivation
- Teaming & Teamwork
- Result-Oriented Learning
- Process Learning
- Improvement vs. Change
- Data-Driven Decision Making
- Performance Learning & Leadership

Who should attend: Teachers, principals, professors, superintendents, administrators, school board members, parents and government leaders responsible for education at the local, state or federal level. Participants are encouraged to come as a team and learn together how to support transformation in their schools.
